

Chapter 6: Learning

Classical Conditioning

Learning

- A change in an organism's behavior or thought as a result of experience
- Habituation is the process by which we respond less strongly over time to repeated stimuli
- Sensitization is responding more strongly over time when repeatedly exposed to stimuli

Classical Conditioning

- Much learning depends on associating one thing with another
- Conditioning is forming associations among stimuli
- Pavlov's Dogs

