

Requirement 2:

A business is an organization, recognized under the law, which attempts to create value by exchanging products with customers for money. By this definition the business of education will play a major role in my achieving my career goals. The University of Virginia, McIntire School of Commerce, and Darden School of Business all offer a valuable service in exchange for money. Now I don't believe that they abide by Milton Friedman's philosophy of business, rather their main priority is to provide the highest quality of education possible. Even though these institutions don't prioritize profits, they do have to generate profits in order to remain. These institutions are also in constant competition with other educational institutions in order to attract the best employees and students.

My main career goals revolve around working in the financial sector, however I also hope to start my own non-profit someday. Non-profits don't prioritize the maximizations of profits, however they do share a lot of characteristics and key principles of regular for-profit businesses. Non-profit organizations look to deal with the special needs of society, meaning they look to provide fulfill a demand society is making. I personally hope to start an organization dealing with poverty in Pakistan, which means I would be supplying poverty stricken Pakistani citizens with much needed aide.

Business is going to play a role in every step of the way. The business of education aims to attract the world's greatest professors and students. This involves in engaging in competition with other educational institutions and aiming to provide the highest quality of service as possible. Even in organizations that don't prioritize money, business is still relevant. Non-profit organizations look to meet the special needs of society, much like for-profit organizations look to meet demands in certain markets. Business will play a major role in my dream resume as it pertains to almost any organization I choose to be a part of.
